In DR Congo, visual art is not accessible to all. We allow artists to reflect on the social space and public sphere in the community.

In DR Congo, visual art is not accessible to all. In order to break the boundary for the group of the public who do not usually frequent its premises, the art centre must remain desirable to some. In order to support socially committed artistic practices in a particular context, we give the opportunity to a public and population of a part of the city deprived of contemporary creation, allowing artists to reflect on the social space and public sphere in the community by engaging artists to intervene. However, the location is chosen in resonance with different contexts to create a mirror effect between the different interventions and a basis of dialogue between the contexts that will bring an audience that are not necessarily from the medium of art to interact on these artistic actions presented in the MobileGallery.

This exhibition must present artists who work in public space and are engaged in social practice in the city of Kinshasa. The project is a new and original concept to present artists who dare to take risks in their approach and artistic practice and who do experimental work and research related to the community of the most deprived neighbourhoods living in the city of Kinshasa, which is the least developed and the most landlocked, because of its geographical location.

It is our aim to communicate and publicise a possible replication of the role of art in society, which can be brought about by increased awareness among contemporary artists who are engaged in creative processes that see art and society as interdependent. The experience has been appreciated by a wide public that has been excluded from artistic activities and exhibitions. We carry out this experiment in order to sensitise a large public. About the artist

Kin ArtStudio is an artists initiative based in Kinshasa. Created by Vitshois Mwilambwe B., we promote innovative creation in visual arts and other forms of artistic expression. Our vision is to remain a place of creation and innovation in visual arts. We support socially engaged artistic practices in a local context with innovative artistic projects in social space, so that they can work with the local community, aiming to produce and contribute to social development.
